Egypt

Christians concerned after referendum backs constitutional changes

Egyptian Christians are expressing concern over the results of last Saturday's referendum, which saw 77 per cent of voters backing constitutional changes that will allow the country to move quickly on to elections.

An Open Doors worker in Egypt on the day of the referendum said, "I spoke to Christians from various denominations – Orthodox, Presbyterian and Evangelical – but all said they would vote 'no', and they hoped the majority of Egypt would do the same."

It is not that the Christian population does not want the constitution to be changed, he explained. Rather, many Christians fear this change is too quick and will only benefit the established political blocs - the Muslim Brotherhood and the National Democratic Party.

"Normally a constitutional change takes months or even years of preparation, before all pros and cons are weighed well," said an Egyptian believer who requested anonymity. "So what do they think? That in a few weeks' time after the revolution, these changes have been prepared properly? I cannot believe that. It is better to wait and take one step at a time. If you want to make changes, then make sure it is done well."

He continued: "The National Democratic Party and the Muslim Brotherhood have everything in place. They are well organised and want parliamentary elections as soon as possible. Because these two parties take the lead, I expect they will be able to get a big majority, if elections for the next parliament come in just six months. This will give them the freedom to rewrite the constitution in whatever way they like, and the revolution will turn out to be useless."

Abuna Butros, who serves in the cave churches of Mokattam, Cairo, urgently requested prayer for Egypt. "Pray for the constitution and the country," he said. "We are sure that we are in the hand of God, like streams of water. We are waiting for a president and constitution from the hand of God Himself. We believe God will give this, because we believe Egypt will see a big spiritual revolution. And we want it soon."

Please pray:

Praise God that the referendum passed peacefully and that many Egyptians were able to cast their vote for the first time.

Pray for wisdom and courage for Egyptian Christians at this time of change. Pray that they would make the most of every opportunity to be channels of God's love and truth in their communities.

Ask God to raise up a just and fair government that will rule for the good of the people and defend the rights of the poor and marginalised. Amen
